Dynamiq yachts prepare a fast displacement series

On June 25th 2015, the Dynamiq brand was launched in Monaco focusing on long-distance yachts with comfort and style. Three all-occasion yachts have been designed by the Dynamiq team, these constitute a new range called Grand Turismo Transatlantic.

The yard's new series will be part of a new vessel type which is coming to be known as fast displacement. Key players in this new vessel category include well-known names such as Heesen Yachts which have already launched their first series, the 55m Azamanta

The team Sergei Dobroserdov, CEO of Dynamiq yachts, assembled is however no less impressive. The interior design was done by the famous Bannenberg & Rowell, London-based studio. The hull form was done by Azure Naval Architects and Van Oossanen Naval Architects. Glyn Peter Machin handled the deck furniture and Rogier van der Heide the hue WiFi lighting system. To represent the Dynamiq brand on the sales market, Hein Velema, Worth Avenue Yachts broker, was picked with Connor F. Cogan representing the US office and Nikita Gorchakov representing the brand in Russia.

The Dynamiq GTT is available in three base models of very manageable, optimum size: the 127 foot (38.6 metre) D4 base model and S4 sport version, and the lengthened 132 foot (40 metre) D4 L limousine version. The base model is equipped with MAN diesels and Fortjes pod drive propulsion to give a maximum speed of 21 knots, while the D4 S sport version features MTU engines and larger pods for a top speed of 25 knots. In addition, the S4 features carbon fibre styling details to the interior and exterior, model-specific paint options and further interior options not available on the base model.
